Sara was presenting her final project in front of her class, and she was both nervous and excited. As she spoke, she tried to observe her classmates' reactions to gauge their interest. She noticed that one of her classmates, Ahmed, was sitting with his arms crossed, leaning slightly back in his chair, and avoiding direct eye contact. At times, he even glanced at his phone. Based on these nonverbal cues, Sara assumed that Ahmed was bored, disinterested, or possibly even critical of her presentation. This made her feel uncomfortable and distracted her during the rest of her talk. After the presentation, she confronted Ahmed and expressed her disappointment in his behavior. Ahmed, however, was surprised by her reaction. He explained that he had been feeling unwell that day and was physically uncomfortable, which affected his posture and expressions. He also mentioned that despite his appearance, he had been listening carefully and actually found her presentation informative. This incident highlights how nonverbal communication can often be misunderstood, as gestures, posture, and facial expressions can carry multiple meanings depending on context, personal conditions, and individual differences.

1. Identify any two types of nonverbal cues portrayed by Ahmed and provide a short description of each.
2. Explain why Sara misinterpreted Ahmed's nonverbal cues using the concept of "ambiguity in nonverbal communication".
3. List any two guidelines for improving non-verbal communication.

Q. No 2: Read the given excerpt carefully and answer the following questions. In your responses, be sure to incorporate key concepts and terms studied in the chapters to provide well-supported answers. (3+4=7) (CLO-5)

At a mid-sized marketing agency in Lahore, Sameer, a team leader, called a brief meeting with his team to discuss the launch of a new campaign. He said, "We should try to finalize the draft by Friday. It would be ideal if everyone could give their input on time." Hina, a junior copywriter, interpreted Sameer's words literally. She believed that "try to finalize" meant there was flexibility, and that "it would be ideal" was a polite suggestion rather than a strict deadline. She planned to submit her draft by Monday. Meanwhile, Bilal, another team member, understood the message as a clear instruction and stayed late to ensure his section was ready by Friday. On Friday, when Hina had not submitted her draft, Sameer expressed disappointment, assuming she ignored the deadline. Hina was surprised by the reaction, as in her pragmatic understanding, the message implied an optional effort rather than an obligation. This situation demonstrates the difference between semantics and pragmatics. The semantic meaning is the literal instruction to finalize the draft by Friday. The pragmatic meaning considers context, politeness, and the implied urgency. Misunderstanding occurred because Hina interpreted the pragmatic cues differently from Sameer's intended urgency.

1. Which pragmatic cues contributed to the misunderstanding?
2. List any 4 guidelines for improving pragmatics?
