Question No.1

(CLO No. 4)

Marks: 10

Q1: Read the case study and answer the questions given at the end.

Sarah, a recent college graduate, eagerly awaited her job interview with a prestigious marketing firm. As she entered the sleek, modern office, she noticed her interviewer, Mr. Thompson, sitting behind a large desk with a serious expression. During the interview, Sarah tried to appear enthusiastic and confident. She maintained strong eye contact, smiled frequently, and spoke at length about her experiences, often gesturing animatedly. At times, she interrupted briefly to add more details or clarify her achievements.

Meanwhile, Mr. Thompson frowned occasionally, crossed his arms, leaned back in his chair, and glanced at his watch several times. He asked short questions and provided little verbal feedback. As Sarah continued speaking energetically, the interaction became increasingly strained. Mr. Thompson grew increasingly distant and visibly impatient, eventually ending the interview abruptly. Sarah left feeling confused and unsure why the conversation had not gone well.

Questions

1. What caused the breakdown in communication between Sarah and Mr. Thompson? Explain two factors. [2]
2. Identify two nonverbal cues shown by Mr. Thompson and explain what each likely communicated. [4]
3. Suggest two specific adjustments Sarah could have made to her nonverbal behavior to improve rapport and responsiveness. [2] Adapt
4. As the interviewer, what two strategies could Mr. Thompson have used to communicate concerns more clearly and professionally? [2]

Question No.2

(CLO No. 3)

Marks: 15

Q2: Read the case study and answer the questions given at the end.

Adeel, a newly promoted project manager at a rapidly expanding marketing firm, was assigned to deliver a high-stakes presentation to senior executives on a new client acquisition strategy. Although technically knowledgeable, he prepared his slides the night before, filling them with dense text and detailed statistics copied directly from reports. The presentation lacked a clear structure, preview, and smooth transitions between ideas. During delivery, Adeel read directly from the slides in a monotone voice, avoided eye contact, and remained rigid behind the podium. When questioned, he appeared defensive and struggled to provide concise answers. His slides were overcrowded, with small fonts and distracting colors that reduced readability. He also failed to consider the executives' expectations, assuming that detailed data alone would persuade them. As the presentation progressed, several executives appeared disengaged, checking their phones or repeatedly asking for clarification. Although the proposal itself was strong, the presentation was ultimately perceived as unconvincing.

Questions

1. How did Adeel fail to conduct effective audience analysis, and how might understanding the executives' expectations have improved his presentation strategy? [3]
2. Identify the weaknesses in Adeel's organizational pattern. How could he improve his introduction, main points, transitions, and conclusion to enhance clarity and persuasion? [4]
3. Evaluate Adeel's delivery style. What specific delivery techniques should he develop to appear more confident and credible? [4]
4. What principles of effective visual aid design did Adeel violate? How could he redesign his slides to make them clearer, more engaging, and audience-centered? [4]
