Q2. Read the following passage and paraphrase it in your own words.

For almost two decades, we have been told the reassuring story of Pakistan's steady decline in poverty from 64 per cent in 2001-02 to almost 22 per cent in 2018-19. The latest report, on Poverty, Equity and Resilience Assessment (PERA) 2025 by the World Bank, tells a different story of Pakistan currently being on a backward course as the earlier progress in poverty has since been reversed. Fifty-seven per cent of the decline in the poverty rates is also mainly attributed to non-agricultural income – rise in informal and urban jobs, services and remittances that could not provide protection against shocks. This reveals that, even though poverty declined, the patterns of poverty reduction were not resilient or sustainable, and millions of people were still vulnerable to falling back into poverty due to any small shock. The report only echoed what many had already warned but still critics would point out the statistical credibility of the results been shared through projections and microsimulations. It is argued that the updated poverty figures are not based on the most recent household survey data and thus, carries methodological limitations. While this is true, the results are consistent with the macro indicators since economic growth came from rise in informal but low-productivity jobs rather than structural and stable transformation. Such consumption-driven economic growth made prior gains unsustainable long before 2020.
